Floyd was one of 13 children raised in Lyon Mountain. He often talked about his childhood and had many happy memories with his siblings. After high school, he and five of his friends enlisted. Floyd wanted to serve his country during the Korean Conflict and received training at the Pentagon before his eight years of proud service to the United States Air Force. He was stationed at Sampson Air Force Base, Sheppard Air Force Base, and Okinawa Kadena Air Force Base. During his stay at Sampson, he met his first wife, Gerry, with whom he had four children. He drove 33 years without one accident, retiring in 1996. After retiring from NAC, he went to work for Service Merchandise and Durocher's Auto, finally retiring again in 2011.

Floyd married Christine Andrews on May 26, 2002 and became the “bonus dad” to Eric Normandin, who Floyd loved like his own.

Floyd loved to tell a good joke. He adored his family and loved spending time with them, especially Sunday morning coffee. He was an exceptional carpenter and handyman. He also loved to sing and whistle, was an avid fan of the Boston Red Sox, and was always smiling.
