“ I am so sorry I missed hearing of the services for Pauline. I would have attended on behalf of the Almanzo and Laura Ingalls Wilder Association. The founders of the organization appreciated that Pauline and her sister Marcelia Jones persuaded their family members to sell the homestead on the Stacy Road to become a museum dedicated to Almanzo Wilder. His boyhood on that property made him the Farmer Boy in the book by Laura Ingalls Wilder. I am the only current board member who remembers Pauline attending every special event for years, checking out the house restoration and barns reconstruction. She mentioned the hospitality of Joseph and Sophrona, inviting visitors into their home long before anyone ever thought of making it open to the public. If I had known, I would come after the day's school tour-which would not have happened had the property been sold as farmland. Many thousands of people, with representatives of every continent except Antarctica, have visited since the sale in 1987. Thank you again Pauline for making all of that possible.
